"This centennial history of the library (Detroit Public Library) portrays the hundred years that have intervened since (its opening day). The neophyte, store-front library of 1865 is now an institution comprising a large and complex main library, a downtown library, 27 branches, and two bookmobiles, housing a total of 2,000,000 volumes. In daily life and in times of crisis, the library has become an important leader in the community." - from front flyleaf. An interesting history of librarians, finances, collections, and Andrew Carnegie's contribution.
